Today, manufacturers, architects, designers, specifiers and building owners at the forefront of green building are providing full transparency about their products' chemical ingredients, leading to new business opportunities and better products. An exciting and rapidly expanding field of green building—Material Health—is now an essential part of leadership in green building projects.

Now in wide use, The Health Product Declaration (HPD) Open Standard has evolved as the foundation for transparency reporting since its introduction in 2012, with more than 700 manufacturers providing material transparency data on over 40,000 products, with more added every day.
